overview

The 25hours Hotel at MuseumsQuartier in Vienna's seventh district is a relaxed, atmospheric hotel which plays with the dreams and sensations associated with the world of the circus and reinterprets features more commonly seen in the big top in a totally different environment. Following completion of the second phase of construction in March 2013, the centrally located hotel has a total of 217 guest rooms.

The hotel foyer is hallmarked by smooth transitions, linking it directly to the RIBELLI restaurant, which seats almost 120 people. A peaceful rebellion is taking place, and one of a delicious kind. The restaurant has dedicated itself to nothing short of a culinary revolution. Italian food can be found everywhere - however, authentic and honest cucina popolare is harder to come by. When the spring sunshine makes Vienna even more stunning, the restaurant gains a refreshing addition in the form of Burger de Ville and an authentic outdoor dining area. With space for about 80 people, it follows in the Viennese tradition of pavement cafés: space to drink, eat, chat and laugh alfresco in the laidback atmosphere of Weghuberpark. The 25hours outdoor dining area and beer garden is a great addition to Vienna's favourite summer spot.

On the floor below the restaurant and lobby, the hotel has created a spacious function suite with an outdoor terrace overlooking Weghuberpark. The three light-flooded Freiraum function rooms with professional conference equipment provide the ideal backdrop for creative brainstorming and focussed discussions. They can be rented individually or combined to cater for a range of party sizes, with various seating arrangement options. Muted colours and parquet flooring made from cross-grained wood create a warm atmosphere, while stacked shoe racks and bedside tables provide practical storage space with a difference. Receptions can be held in the event foyer, which has standing room for up to 200 people. Glass domes in the ceiling provide wonderfully atmospheric light, a small bar with shutters on the front reminds guests of a funfair stall, and witty details such as large distorting mirrors convey precisely the right combination of professionalism and nonchalance.

Need a break? After a long tour of the city, why not take it easy at one of Vienna's many coffee houses or the hotel's spa? Spanning 250 square metres, it's a fitness area, sauna and steam bath are the perfect place for hotel guests to sweat, cool off and relax – or the other way round. The spa welcomes visitors with a tea and refreshments area, hanging chairs which playfully surprise guests by rocking, and zinc troughs which are used as either foot baths or shelving. There are quiet areas close by, either indoors in a light-flooded room with glass domes in the roof or outside in the sheltered courtyard for those who fancy a breath of fresh air. Glass walls create oases of calm without hemming visitors in and allow them to admire Olaf Hajek's charming little mermaid from various angles. She is the colourful star of the large wall mosaic which the Berlin-based artist designed exclusively for 25hours.

As you might expect in a hotel dedicated to show business and spectacle, a red carpet leads the way to the guest rooms – more as a humorous homage to the traditional red of the circus than a nod to Hollywood. Spread over seven storeys, the 217 private retreats offer all 25hours' standard features: ultra comfortable beds, air-conditioning, a flat-screen TV, a minibar, UE Boom Bluetooth speaker, sustainable toiletries and free Wi-Fi. Just like all the rooms are decorated in an incredibly cheerful colour scheme and finished off with unique touches, such as hand-picked design elements and illustrations by Olaf Hajek on the walls. Special highlights include the spacious Gigantic Panorama Rooms come as you are.

with floor-length windows and the four Extra Large rooms on the fifth floor with a private balcony including an open-air bath tub and a breathtaking view. Another eye-catcher are two analogue rooms, which are equipped with up to 16 analog adventures that are designed to provoke both thought and action. The guest is welcomed by a vinyl record, cut specifically by SUPERSENSE for 25hours, that automatically fills the suite with warm waves of sound. A small, classic tube TV and a video recorder with a fine selection of cassettes invite the guests to a seductively pleasurable film evening, while the more creatively inclined take a seat at the typewriter to write a letter on exquisite, handmade paper before heading off with a polaroid for an analog photo adventure.

Overnight guests aren't the only ones who can enjoy the superb view. Anyone can use the spectacular outdoor lift to travel right the way up to the top floor. It's worth the trip to take in the roof terrace overlooking the park, the parliament and the palace of justice – on a clear day, you can even see the vineyards of Korneuburg and Klosterneuburg. Sprawling across some 400 square metres, the Dachboden perched above the city's rooftops is designed as a continuum and adapts to whatever is required of it on any given day. It could be a comfortable lounge in the afternoon, an after-work hotspot in the evening, and a hip bar well into the early hours. Or it could be a venue for events of all kinds – great DJs and young bands showcasing their latest work, wine tastings or readings.

RIBELLI

Italian food can be found everywhere - however, authentic and honest cucina popolare is harder to come by. This is about to change. Five friends spent a year working on the concept of the restaurant together with experts from 25hours. The five rebels are made up of pizzaiolo Vincenzo Carnemolla, restaurateur Corrado Falco (Gallo Nero, Hamburg), who is well-known far beyond Hamburg's borders, and his former executive chef Taku Tabuchi (S'ACCAPAU, Tokyo). The Sicilian-Japanese group is rounded off by South Tyrolean Food & Beverage expert Thomas Schuster, who, together with wine consultant Massimo Ruffino, assures the authenticity of the ingredients that are used.

The restaurant serves up uncompromisingly good fare from meticulously selected producers who put their hearts and minds into their work. RIBELLI is centred around the three pillars of salumi e antipasti, Neapolitan pizza and piatti dal forno, that is traditional oven-baked dishes such as classic lasagne and gnocchi alla sorrentina. In addition, there are carefully selected Italian wines and craft beer, because in Italy, pizza and beer go hand in hand. The central point of the restaurant is its salumeria, where Italian varieties of sausage and cheeses are freshly sliced by the salumiere. Foodies are also able to buy prosciutto, pancetta and pecorino romano direct from the restaurant to enjoy at home.

Another eye-catcher and focal point of the restaurant is the counter where the pizza oven is located, which is naturally also where the pizzaiolo prepares the pizzas. Bernd Gieske, Director of Food & Beverage at 25hours, says: "At RIBELLI, we are strongly committed to honest Italian cuisine. However, we have a rebellious approach; RIBELLI is not a romantic restaurant, but instead noisy and busy - you won't find any red and white tablecloths here. We are very proud of the meticulously selected produce and ingredients that we use. Ninety per cent of the products are sourced from Italy. This includes, of course, the beer and wine, but also ham, cheese, oil, tomato sauce, olives and flour for the pizzas and focaccia."

DREIMETA was once again on board for the visual redesign. The Augsburg-based creative team, led by Armin Fischer and Andrea Kraft-Hammerschall, has already designed the hotel rooms and is now responsible for designing RIBELLI. The attentive observer will notice the tongue-in-cheek, yet subtle allusions to clichés used in the restaurant. For example, the colour scheme, which is based on the Tricolore. However, the shades used are not vibrant and loud, but consist instead of a reserved palette of colours which lets pastel tones speak for themselves.

The new wall design boasts handcrafted tiles in varying nuances of white tones. This is a reference to traditional crafts and the lovingly-created RIBELLI products which are used to prepare the meals. The tiles form the perfect backdrop for the salumeria, which is somewhat unique - knitted sausage products are a surprising way of implementing the theme. A further nod to the theme can be found in the counter's pink terrazzo panelling. Or is it only the trained eye of a true sausage connoisseur that would notice the parallels to salami here? Crowning the restaurant's new style is a mural specially created for RIBELLI by the illustrator Olaf Hajek, who also produced the wallpaper patterns for the rooms in the hotel. The image, which is around eight metres long, depicts Hajek's interpretation of the Last Supper.

Dachboden

But that's not all. Take the lift up to the Dachboden hotel bar, where the great atmosphere downstairs in RIBELLI is replicated on the eighth floor. And there's a great view to enjoy too. The Dachboden serves a few snacks, but it is better known for a great place for a drink or two. In the spirit of Vienna's seventh district, the Dachboden bar serves a mixture of local beverages and distinctive specialities at fair prices. "We're a combination of a beach bar and a parliament canteen – without the sand or the suits," summaries Roland Eggenhofer, Senior Sales & Marketing Manager at 25hours Hotel at MuseumsQuartier. In addition to various soft drink brands, the bar has respectable range of beers, cocktails and long drinks.

Burger de Ville

It is no surprise that sensual food is wowing customers in the outdoor dining area and beer garden in neighbouring Weghuberpark too, where 25hours has opened a burger van in a cult American Airstream. Fresh from Berlin, where Burger de Ville has already made a lot of people happy and full, the silver van is now part of the alfresco dining on offer at the Viennese 25hours hotel, enhancing the Italian-style menu on offer at RIBELLI with top-quality burgers. Admittedly, it's difficult to choose between the funky burger menu when you're sipping a very drinkable glass of a cold refreshment. CEO Christoph Hoffmann has the following advice for those struggling to make up their minds: "Just keep coming back." She promises locals and guests like that: "In our garden, Viennese tradition, Italian flavours and Californian coolness sit side by side."

interior & story

From the museum district to the Prater, the Opera Ball, the Life Ball and the city's many music and theatre venues, Vienna has always been synonymous with sensations and shows – a place for visitors to see and be seen. The tradition-steeped institution that is the circus represents spectacle as a whole at the 25hours Hotel at MuseumsQuartier. The first permanent circus opened at Vienna's Prater amusement park back in 1808. Throughout Europe, the circus experienced its heyday in the early 20th century, when it was a combination of a freak show, a chance to gawk at people from faraway lands and vaudeville entertainment. With this in mind, the Augsburg-based design team Dreimeta focused on classic circus attributes when they interpreted the theme for the 25hours Hotel at MuseumsQuartier. They lovingly gathered together and revamped vintage finds from this period, without concealing the pieces' age. Instead of opting for striking retro accessories, they sought out memorabilia with a story to tell. "Juggling clubs, trapeze wires, chairs and desk lamps – we trawled countless flea markets, hunting and gathering," recalls designer Armin Fischer. The creative team gave old-fashioned things the best new home they could hope for, choosing antiques with their very own experiences and giving them a new lease of life. "Everything we chose has been given a facelift, rewired, painted or padded," explains Britta Kleweken, senior interior designer in Armin Fischer's Dreimeta team.

Circuses are all about improvising, and the creative team shared this philosophy. "Everything at the circus is temporary and can be put up and taken down quickly. The troupe uses the venue they find themselves in and make the best they can of it with simple means. We wanted to give the hotel an improvised feel too, while still making it seem cosy and not unfinished," says the designer. This is why the stone floor in the public area was only given minimal treatment instead of being hidden by traditional coverings, for example. Room dividers reminiscent of animal cages are used in lots of places throughout the hotel – from the lobby to the Dachboden bar – to create distinct atmospheric zones whilst always remaining transparent and flexible. As an indirect allusion to the typical circus ring, curved details appear throughout the hotel: round rugs highlight the floor, the reception and advertising pillar in the lobby are rounded, oval zinc basins are used for storage in the sauna area, and numerous stools, lampshades and other little accessories are also round – from wooden hoops to unicycles. In the lobby there is also an analogue highlight waiting for the guests: An analogue highlight at 25hours Hotel at MuseumsQuartier is the Phonocut. The world's first Phonocut Mini Manufactory has everything you need to produce high-quality, entirely analogue vinyl editions in an instant. Visitors to the 25hours Hotel at MuseumsQuartier have the opportunity to produce their own record using a simple yet amazing process involving just the touch of a button. The cover artwork is also self-produced: guests can create their own personalised record design. A seesaw is used as a coffee table, a bench is suspended from the ceiling like a swing instead of standing on the floor, distorting mirrors create illusions in the business lounge, and various kitsch fairy lights replace designer lamps as they meander across the ceiling.

References to the world of the circus create an appealing overall look. Never just a mere backdrop, they offer a new take by consciously reinterpreting the theme: a seesaw is used as a coffee table, a bench is suspended from the ceiling like a swing instead of standing on the floor, distorting mirrors create illusions in the business lounge, and various kitsch fairy lights replace designer lamps as they meander across the ceiling. Every so often, in typical 25hours style, the interior is designed with a generous helping of irony to offer a change of perspective. For example, anyone using the lift will find themselves surrounded by wood panelling, bars and large mirrors, making them briefly feel like the king of the beasts as they travel upwards – almost as if they were caged themselves.

come as you are.

Bold use is made of colour throughout the hotel, with red often dominating as the classic colour of the circus, for example in the corridors' carpets, heavy velvet curtains and much of the upholstery. Vibrant, cheerful colours also play a key role in the concept for the guest rooms, where wallpaper featuring exclusive illustrations by the artist Olaf Hajek is used as an eye-catcher and a spatially defining design element. Hajek developed a total of five scenes especially for the 25hours hotel in Vienna. Coordinated with the colour schemes used for the guest rooms, the Berlin-based artist portrays circus scenes which blur the distinctions between fantasy and reality, space and time in his own inimitable style. The illustrations are funny, strange, acrobatic, ironic, bizarre and extremely artistic, featuring bearded women, juggling clowns and horses with bulging calf muscles. Seedy characters can be seen rendezvousing while rabbits are pulled out of a hat and people in pompous outfits and opulent feather jewellery parade past.

Aside from the striking wallpaper, the rooms feature unobtrusive – but no less witty – allusions to circus motifs. The lighting in the bathrooms is reminiscent of a performer's dressing room, the taps have a nostalgic design, the fixtures look and feel like a circus trailer, and various accessories pick up on the hotel's fun theme. Although the circus was the most important point of reference for the design, the creative team took a broader view. "The circus alone is too restrictive," says Britta Kleweken and explains: "We interpreted the theme in a more general way to include all the fun of the fair." For a concrete example, look no further than the relaxation area in the sauna suite, where individual seats are suspended from the ceiling in a circle, recalling a swing carousel. The interior cleverly refers to the world of spectacle with a clear aim: not just putting nice things in a hotel, but creating a hotel with a soul. 25hours CEO Christoph Hoffmann sums it up as follows: "It was important to us not to create a superficial themed hotel. 25hours Hotel at MuseumsQuartier is colourful, witty and sometimes showy – but the focus is on the atmosphere, not the design theme. The result is a relaxed hotel where people quite simply feel at home ... unless they're afraid of clowns and acrobats."

architecture & history

Everyone associates Vienna with magnificent insignia of power, smart boulevards and a tantalising combination of world-weariness and confectionery. But there is more to it than that! The 25hours Hotel at MuseumsQuartier is located at the start of Lerchenfelder Strasse, marking the beginning of the seventh district. Anyone who takes a look around here will soon forget all the clichés. There is no trace of the melancholy which is said to pervade this city. Der Siebte, or the seventh – as the Viennese call it – is a stark contrast to the upper-class first district. “As a dynamic, urban hotel product, 25hours feels at home here, away from the picture-postcard idyll. Our neighbourhood is progressive and multi-layered with a vibrant scene,” says 25hours CEO Christoph Hoffmann.

Culture vultures can fall straight out of bed and into an art gallery – the museum district is just around the corner, offering a generous helping of culture. The centrally located museum district is one of the ten largest cultural complexes in the world, combining baroque buildings with new architecture and bringing together cultural institutions of all sizes and different art genres in spectacular style.

By creating the 25hours Hotel at MuseumsQuartier, the Viennese firm BWM Architekten und Partner awoke an almost-forgotten 1970s building from its slumber. The original building is located by Weghuberpark – which itself is somewhat tucked away – where Lerchenfelder Strasse and Museumsstrasse intersect. Together with the Palais Trautson and the Palais Auersperg, it marks the beginning of Vienna’s densely developed seventh district. The building was erected in 1971 as a six-storey student hall of residence, designed by architect Dr Kurt Schlauss. It has a classic reinforced concrete frame with a horizontally structured façade and evenly spaced windows. In the first of the two construction phases, a glass superstructure was added to the severe, regular building, housing three new storeys for the hotel to use. At this stage, 34 rooms were used to accommodate the first guests. To start with, the lower part of the building was still used by students as a hall of residence. The glass superstructure echoes the clear structure of the original façade and creates a new, contemporary building in conjunction with the 70s block. Adding the new storeys gave the somewhat tired building a facelift and suddenly made it stand out of the streetscape. It now boldly works with the surrounding buildings to form a gateway at the top of Lerchenfelder Strasse, on the border between the first and seventh districts. Anyone who walks past the building can now imagine what a breathtaking view the new floors offer of Vienna’s city centre.

In the second phase of construction, the original building was converted for hotel use and the existing façade was highlighted whilst retaining its original details. It is now painted a striking black to stand out from the surrounding buildings.
